Professional Skills

Skills in labour sociology: my Master's degree and the research project for my Master's thesis have provided me with the in-depth knowledge needed to understand the world of the labour market from an intersectional and inclusive perspective, both through the study of literature and through the study of national and European policies on the subject.

Research skills: my internship at the IRS provided me with the tools to consolidate the skills I already possessed, and to carry out activities that allowed me to put those skills into practice in a practical and effective way (e.g. drafting reports, comparing European policies, evaluating public policies, database management, etc.)

Skills in international migration and civil rights: during my Bachelor's degree (and through the writing of my Bachelor's thesis), I was introduced to the topic of civil rights, which I explored in more depth during my internship at URMIS. The latter allowed me to take a closer look at issues related to social inclusion and international migration through awareness-raising activities (e.g. theatre performances) and activities connected to social research (e.g. international conferences).
